The Family's Point of View.

IF you are thirty-five years old and are in good health, and are earning $100 a month, your life, on which this earning depends, is worth $22,700 in cash to-day to your family. If you die they lose the $100 a month, the equivalent of which is the $22,700. The cash value of your life to them is therefore $22,700. They lose that if you die.

You have made your family dependent on you: dependent on that $100 a month. You have put them at the risk of losing it by losing you.

If you had a piece of property which was bringing you in $100 a month and it stood a chance of being destroyed and so cutting off your income, you would not rest until you had taken enough of that $100 a month and insured yourself against the loss of it. You would consider that you had not done your duty by yourself until you had so protected yourself effectually.

Your life is just such a piece of property to your family: you have made it so. They need just that same effectual protection against its loss which may come any day. And they cannot protect themselves. They rely on you for that as much as they do for the $100 a month itself. They need protection against that loss even more than you need protection against the loss of your property. But they cannot have it unless you give it to them.

You have exposed them to the loss: you have made them dependent on you: you alone can protect them in their dependence.

THE CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Makes its plans from the family's point of view: to give them the most absolute protection, at the least cost to you and with perfect equity to both. It will be glad to serve you and your family in this great matter.
