Faith in Yale Extortioners.

[Mr. Martin in Harper's Weekly.]

Yale has issued a call for four million dollars—not to buy cruisers or put herself in a state of defence, but simply to qualify it for the more thorough prosecution of the business of education. President Dwight in his annual report names this round sum as about what Yale will need in the next six or seven years, and reports that the Corporation has matured a scheme for finding it. He wants a big University Hall, to cost $500,000, and sums ranging from $60,000 to $500,000 for the Divinity School, the Law School, the Medical School, a professorship of architecture, the Musical Department, the Graduate Department, the Academic Department, the Scientific School, a pension fund, an addition to the University funds, and the library. It is proposed that at least $1,500,000 of this money shall be raised before the bicentennial celebration in October, 1901, and that part of it shall be put to immediate use to build the big University Hall, which it would be so particularly convenient to have in time for the celebration. What Yale seriously undertakes is very apt to be accomplished sooner or later. There are very long pockets in the garments of some Yale graduates, and very enthusiastic sentiments in Yale bosoms, and though the present Summer seems not likely to be a favorable time to raise funds, whenever the Yale extortioners set themselves seriously to their task we shall doubtless see imposing results.
