'54—On May 27 President McKinley named Col. W. W. Gordon of Savannah as Brigadier General of Volunteers. Col. Gordon is not a West Point graduate, and in that respect he is unique among those appointed up to the present time by the President to positions of this class. Col. Gordon is the third ex-confederate to receive such an appointment. The Morning News of Savannah thus sketches his life:

"Col. William Washington Gordon was born in Savannah, and became a cotton merchant here after his graduation from Yale College. He was in active service in the Confederate army from May 1, 1861, to April 26, 1865, in the line as lieutenant in the Georgia Hussars, Stuart's cavalry, in Virginia; on the staff as captain and inspector of Mercer's infantry brigade on the coast of Georgia, and served from Dalton to Lovejoy in the Atlanta campaign. He was captain and adjutant of Anderson's brigade of Wheeler's cavalry in the campaign through the Carolinas. October, 1865, he resumed business as a cotton merchant in Savannah. Gen. Gordon served three terms—from 1884 to 1890—in the Georgia Legislature. He is senior officer of the organized militia in Georgia, having served continuously since the restoration of the civil government in Georgia. He was captain of the Georgia Hussars and afterwards colonel of the First Georgia Cavalry. He has been in command of five state encampments. As captain and colonel he has been in command of troops to suppress or prevent riots twice on call of Mayors of Savannah, twice on call of Governors of Georgia. Gen. Gordon had yellow fever in Savannah in November during the yellow fever epidemic of 1876. He is an immune."

In naming Col. Gordon for a commission, the President put aside the recommendation of the Georgia delegation in Congress and also declined to consider the name of Governor Atkinson of Georgia, who sought the position.
