to join the Battery. In order to hear from these men, it is probable that the recruiting will continue for two or three days longer.

The receipt of the Battery's equipment, and the special attention that is being given to it by State and National authorities, and the beginning of very serious and effective drill under the superintendence of army officers, have reawakened the old enthusiasm to join this unusually fine collection of young fighters.

Should any Yale graduates who see this notice desire to enlist, they are advised to communicate with one of the officers named above, at the recruiting station, 1018 Chapel street. Should they fail to make connections there, they can send their communications to this office and they will be forwarded as speedily as possible. A great deal of haste must be used, as the time is short and the number of vacancies is diminishing fast every day.

The Price That Was Paid.

High in a crevice of the cliff
That bounds the brimming ocean,
A violet blows, and bends and knows
The end of its devotion.

Long time the waves had tossed its
seed,

From some beach-garden plundered,
Till rose the deep, and heap on heap
Its mighty surges thundered.

And while man's egg-shell navies crashed

Against the basalt towers,
Sea knew its need and flung the seed
Where now the violet flowers.

So, to the working of His will
The sea was tempest-riven,
And ships were tossed and men were lost—

But still the flower was given.
