

THE YALE SPIRIT

And the indomitable courage displayed by Eli's sons have been the means of placing the name of Yale in the front rank of American athletics. To this spirit can be credited many victories and it will undoubtedly stimulate Yale men to even greater efforts in the future.

The practice of showing

LIBERALITY TOWARDS ALL

and preference to none has induced this bond of good fellowship, just as it has been instrumental in making THE PRUDENTIAL so popular among all classes. This Company now has over 3,000,000 policies in force, insuring over $414,000,000 and among them are many owned by Yale men.

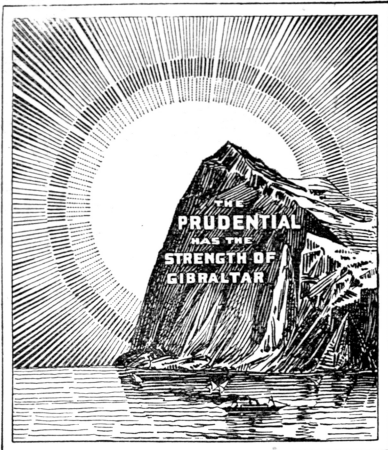

An excellent opportunity is offered as a medium for the investment of funds and the enjoyment of Life Insurance protection. Liberal Agency contracts may be obtained by ambitious young men who wish to secure permanent and profitable employment.

In Memory of Prof. Luquiens.

The Modern Language Club held a meeting in memory of the late Professor Luquiens at Room E1, Osborn Hall, Saturday evening, October 27. The room was the old recitation room of Professor Luquiens, and was filled with members of the Modern Language Club and others, including a number from the Classical Club.

Professor Robert N. Corwin, President of the Modern Language Club, opened the meeting by calling President Hadley to the chair as honorary chairman. Short addresses were then made by Mr. Taylor, Prof. Lang, Prof. Palmer, Mr. Bragdon, of Auburndale, a personal friend of Prof. Luquiens, Mr. Nettleton of the Yale English Department and Prof. Perrin. Prof. Cook was to have spoken, but he was prevented from attending by the illness of a child. A short paper, which he had prepared, was read by Prof. Gruener. After these had spoken, President Hadley spoke briefly. He commented on the simplicity and the sincerity of the very feeling tributes which had been offered as very appropriate to the memory of the man in whom these traits were so noticeable. The general tone of these different short addresses was indicated in the following minute, proposed on behalf of the Executive Committee by Mr. Taylor and adopted by rising vote:

In the death of Prof. Luquiens we mourn the loss of a colleague whose noble life and scholastic attainments have won for him a place of honor in the favor and esteem of this community. Born and reared in Europe, he rose to eminence as a teacher in the country of his adoption. In literary matters, endowed with taste and judgment of rare excellence, he won the good will of his students and gave zest to the study of French literature in Yale University. Mindful of those who feel his loss most keenly, we tender to his wife and children our sincere sympathy.

A "Practical Joke" by a Classmate.

To the Editor of YALE ALUMNI WEEKLY:

Dear Sir:—The announcement of the engagement of H. M. Bissell, '99, published in the WEEKLY some time ago was incorrect. It was a "practical joke" by a member of the Class. I took it in good faith and gave it to Mr. Carpenter. The error was no fault of his. No one regrets such an error more than myself and I would do much to eliminate the chances did I but know a way to do so.

Yours,

DONALD R. HOOKER,
Secretary '99.

Dec. 17.—Rev. Dr. Geo. A. Gordon, of Boston, Mass.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY is commended by educators and philologists almost without exception. The definitions are clear and explicit, the different meanings are given in the order of their development, the pronunciation is indicated by the ordinary diacritical marks taught in the public schools. It is the safe guide of all who would speak and write the English language correctly.—Adv.
