CHICAGO ENTHUSIASTIC.

Unprecedented Meeting—Announcement about Brick Row.

Chicago Yale men turned out in force to greet President Hadley, on the occasion of his appearance at the 34th annual dinner of the Chicago Alumni Association, held at the rooms of the University Club, Wednesday evening, January 3. The meeting was unprecedented in point of numbers and enthusiasm. A specially selected glee club, composed of Messrs. Erskine, '94 S.; Ewing, '93; Hamlin, '92 S.; Cable, '95; Hay, '93; Nolan, '95, and Fisher, '97, led the singing with good effect. Before the speech-making, L. W. Bowers, '79, President of the Association, announced that subscriptions for a Chicago Yale Scholarship fund had been received, which guarantee for the future $1,000 a year, and that this year $600 from the fund would be loaned to the sons of the late Edward G. Mason, Yale '60, who are now in Yale College.

During his address, President Hadley exhibited and explained the preliminary plans prepared by Messrs. Carrere and Hastings, for the new Yale buildings, and stated that the final plans would first be made public through the columns of the ALUMNI WEEKLY. The President then gave his audience the broader outlines of the proposed general development of the grounds and buildings, and the auditorium dining hall and memorial vestibule, administration building, and University club to be erected, if all goes well, in the near future.

The news that North College, Lyceum and the Treasury Building were to be taken away before the bi-centennial was received with equanimity, but the promise that South Middle should not be taken down before that time and the President's confession of a feeling of personal attachment to the venerable dormitory, evoked long and continued applause. President Hadley said in part:

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

"In the responsibilities and duties which this year has brought, there has been nothing for which I care so much as the loyalty with which Yale men have gathered about me. It is at once a solemn and inspiring thing to be thus helped and supported by thousands of friends. We need this help and support at Yale, now, more than at any other time. Yale has always been an institution devoted to the making of a body of men. For this we need the support afforded by the loyalty of the alumni. The larger the university is, the greater the tendency towards the development of specialists—or as some college men are prone to call them, "freaks"—and so the greater the necessity for a coherent body of sentiment lasting throughout the life of the graduates.

"Yale is in no sense a sectional university; its interests are established throughout the length and breadth of the country. My expectation of finding loyalty in Chicago has been tenfold realized. The alumni must know the facts about the University, and I invite their criticism, if it be based on a knowledge of the facts.

THE OLD AND NEW OFFICERS.

"When I assumed the work of office, I felt burdened with the knowledge that two men, long identified with the administration, had decided to withdraw. You know, of course, to whom I refer. (At this point Mr. Bartlett of the Class of '76, which was very much in evidence all the evening, signified his acquiescence.)

"I remember when Charley Bartlett was blowing a horn on the Campus, how Mr. Dexter took it away and jumped on the large end. But I am glad to say that my heavy burden in this respect has been lightened, that a devoted Secretary and equally devoted Treasurer have resigned their charges into competent hands, and that the services of Anson Phelps Stokes, Jr. and Morris F. Tyler have been retained. Another addition has been made to the administrative department in the person of Walter Camp, who is to be Treasurer of the Yale Field Corporation, which has been lifted free from debt. I count on Mr. Camp as an invaluable advisor to the Faculty in that which pertains to athletics; for, while the Faculty, with due regard, was not chosen on its athletic ability, it does not question that athletics are a factor in the making and education of American gentlemen.

CAPTAIN MCBRIDE'S WORK PRAISED.

"I must pay a tribute to what the students themselves have done; starting with weak material this Fall they have worked together, and McBride and others have done this year what Peters did fourteen years ago. Contrary to their expectation, they tied Harvard with a weaker team and gave Princeton at least one hour in which she felt worse than Yale. They have done their best for Yale and have provided Yale with men for the future. Never before has the ideal in athletics been so fully realized.
