MY DAY IN NEW YORK is Thursday
Place, Astor House. Time, 12 to 4.

ORANGE DINNER.

Richard M. Colgate, '77, President of the Association, presided and at the close of the dinner introduced President Hadley, who received a warm New Jersey welcome. President Hadley responded for Yale to the sentiment:

"Young art thou still, and young shalt ever be
In spirit, as thou wast in years gone by;
The present, past, and future blend in thee,
Rich as thou art in names that cannot die,
And youthful hearts already beating high
To emulate the glories won of yore;
That days to come may still the past outvie,
And thy bright roll be lengthened more and more
Of statesman, bard and sage, well versed in noblest lore."

(A large part of President Hadley's speech was printed in the last issue of the paper.)

At the close of President Hadley's address, John Reynolds, Harvard '71, of Montclair, N. J., responded for Harvard, in a humorous address, to the following sentiment:

"The torch still burns, and perhaps more fiercely than ever, but innumerable Rushlights, and Sulphur matches, kindled thereat, are also glancing in every direction."

At the close of Mr. Reynolds's address, "Fair Harvard" was sung very acceptably by the quartet of the University Glee Club, which was present.

The next speaker was Dr. Charlton T. Lewis, Yale '53, who gave a most earnest address, taking as his subject "Yale Culture—A Liberal Conservatism." He said that it was worth something to belong to an institution that had permanence and was rooted deep in the affections of days gone by. What is Yale to-day? Just what she has been from the beginning. Love of truth is her characteristic and that of her graduates. It has always been so in the past—a determined spirit of search for the truth and a determination to follow it, let it lead where it will. What is the wealth of the country? What is the accumulated property of the citizens of the United States? Suppose that it was all annihilated, swept out of existence, and the citizens left standing alone on the naked soil. In a generation it would all be reproduced. Wealth is not told in the figures of railroads, or jewels, or ornaments, but it is in the intelligence and the love of truth of the citizens. This is the idea that should be kept in our minds. President Hadley, by his energy has transformed Yale from an aggregation of separate schools into one great university. We believe not in an aggregation of units, but in an organized life for the whole.

Robert H. McCarter, Princeton '79, of Newark, N. J., responded to the toast "Orange and Black—and Blue."
"We hear it calmly, though a ponderous woe,
And still adore the hand that gives the blow."

Mr. McCarter at once announced that he was a firm believer in college spirit and in a four years' course. He said that he clung to the idea of a four-years' course as a man clings to his children, and firmly believed that the Harvard scheme of reducing the course to three years would result in destroying that nameless something so dear to every Yale man and every Princeton man, which we call "college life." The speaker referred to the lack of spirit at Harvard, the result of which is many vacant rooms on the Campus. He also criticised the undergraduates for leaving the Campus and living in private apartments houses. The Princeton spirit, the speaker claimed, would render it impossible to have rooms vacant on the Princeton Campus; and the old Yale spirit would cause Yale men to love the Fence and the Campus. Mr. McCarter then paid a most eloquent tribute to Judge Taft and referred to his journey to the Philippine Islands as a beautiful example of Yale spirit.

The last speaker was William T. Hincks, Yale '91, of Bridgeport, Conn., who spoke from the standpoint of a Connecticut man visiting New Jersey.

The following men were present:
