Vardon at Yale.

Harry Vardon, professional golf champion of England played three exhibition matches with members of the University Golf Team on the links of the New Haven Golf Club, Friday and Saturday, April 6 and 7. In his first match on Friday afternoon, which was against the best ball of Captain T. M. Robertson, 1900 and T. L. Cheney, 1901, the College champion, Vardon was defeated by 2 up and 1 to play. Both Robertson and Cheney were playing their best game, while Vardon's game, particularly in approach work, was much below his usual standard. His driving, while nothing phenomenal, was unusually as straight as an arrow. A little of his poor play was due to unfamiliarity with the course. The result of the match, which was one of 18 holes, was as follows:

First round:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Vardon	5	4	3	5	4	4	5	4	6-40
Robertson	5	4	4	7	4	4	5	4	5-42
Cheney	5	4	4	8	4	4	4	4	6-43

Second round:

	10	11	12	13	14	15	16	17	18
Vardon	5	4	4	5	4	5	5	4	6-46
Robertson ..	6	4	4	6	4	5	5	3	5-42
Cheney	3	5	4	7	4	4	5	4	5-41

Totals: Vardon, 82; best ball, 79; Cheney, 84 and Robertson, 84.

On Saturday morning Vardon played against the best ball of L. P. Myers, 1901 S. and A. T. Dwight, 1901, and after a very interesting match, beat the Yale men by 2 up. His game was much improved over the preceding day, particularly in approaching and putting. His drives were wonderfully accurate and one of them measured over 260 yards. In the afternoon he played against the best ball of the two remaining men of the Yale team, E. M. Byers, 1901 and C. Hitchcock, Jr., 1903, winning easily by 5 up and 4 to go. On his first round, he brought the record of the course from 75 strokes, made by John Reid, '99 in 1898, to 71. A large crowd running as high as two hundred, followed all the matches, many having come from surrounding towns to watch the exhibition. The following are the scores of the two Saturday matches:

Ninety-Seven Dinner.

The long-heralded dinner of the '97 New York Alumni, was given at the Yale Club in that city on Saturday evening last. On the menus the event was described as "A little gathering of Yale '97 at the Yale Club, New York, March 31, 1900, the occasion marking the second annual dinner and third annual reunion since graduation of the members of the Class living in and around the city." Fifty-eight acceptances were received for the dinner, and as several members of the Class who were unable to be present in the early part of the evening came in later, the total number was about the same as at last year's reunion.

A meeting of the Class was called in the Club library before the dinner. J. S. Wheelwright, 2d, presided, and spoke of the recent death of Henry V. Ryder, '97. On motion, H. S. Coffin and Albert E. Kent were elected as a committee, with power to choose additional members, to draw up suitable resolutions on behalf of the Class. It was then decided to elect a permanent committee to have charge of these annual meetings of the Class in New York, and A. B. Kerr, G. P. Day, R. S. Brewster and T. S. Clarke were elected.

The Class then adjourned to the dinner, which was followed by a thoroughly enjoyable smoker. The list of those present during the evening, which includes the names of some ten men from out of town, who came to New York especially for the occasion, follows:

- E. T. Ware, G. P. Day, F. C. Dodd, C. F. Neergaard, A. B. Kerr, H. L. deForest, W. Church, W. S. Hubbell, Jr., M. B. Faris, T. D. McDonald, T. M. Brown, A. E. Kent, C. Gillette, M. S. Howland, W. As to our New Quarters

Our ambition has been to make and equip a store that would meet New Haven's most exacting demands. We have gone on the principle that only the best that any city had was good enough for this city, the home of Yale, and that sometimes that would't do. How do you think we have succeeded?

Debating News.

At a meeting of representatives of the debating organizations of the Academic, Scientific, Law and Theological Departments, Tuesday evening, April 3, it was decided that, hereafter, all the preliminary trial debates of these departments should be thrown into one, thus making a shorter road to the selection of the team. Another change in the system of preliminaries was the decision to let those men, who had taken part in an intercollegiate debate, go into the finals without entering the preliminaries.

The final trials for the Yale-Princeton debate, May 8, at Princeton, were held Tuesday evening, April 10, the results coming too late for this issue of the WEEKLY. Nine men from the Academic Department, one from the Scientific and one from the Theological Department, who had been chosen in the preliminaries, spoke. They were: W. S. Coffin, M. S. Cressy, G. Green, E. W. Ong, T. W. Swan, all Academic Seniors; R. H. Edwards, 1901; R. H. Ewell, 1903 and A. Tulin, 1903; F. Ballou, 1901 S., and C. W. Merriam, 1901 T.S.

Divinity School Anniversary.

The annual address to the Divinity School will be given Sunday evening, May 13, by President Harris of Amherst College, in Center Church. The address to the graduating class, after the speaking by the students, at the anniversary of the School, Wednesday, May 16, will be given by Rev. Dr. Alexander McKenzie of Cambridge, Mass., in Battell Chapel.

Intercollegiate Golf.

The Lawrence Harbor Golf Club of Staten Island, N. Y., has offered a cup valued at $250, which is to be competed for by college teams. As yet no date has been set, and there have been no entries, but it is probable that Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Columbia will compete, and perhaps several others.

The Easter recess in the University begins Wednesday, April 11, at noon, and ends Thursday morning, April 19, at 8 o'clock. The recess affects all departments but the Divinity School, whose year closes May 16.

The University and Second Crews will be given a rest from and including Wednesday, April 11 until the following Monday. The Freshmen will row daily, up to Saturday, April 14, and will then be given a vacation till Thursday, April 19.
