Self-Help at Yale.

[Dean Henry P. Wright of Yale College.]

It is easier for a man of limited means to go through Yale to-day than it was thirty or forty years ago. While some expenses were lower then, there were fewer opportunities for self-help. The number of students in College who can receive little or no aid from homes is increasing steadily. In the last ten classes 519 men have been graduated who earned while in College all or a considerable part of the money needed for their expenses, and of these 111 received no income whatever from any outside source. This means that several hundred have thus had the benefit of the best college training, to whom these privileges could not have been open thirty years ago. It is well worth while to encourage such men. They appreciate the cost of their education and are likely to make the most of their advantages. They are generally good students, often ranking among the highest, and are prominent in competition for scholarships and literary prizes. Moreover, the graduate who has been thrown upon his own resources in college often finds himself much better fitted to meet the difficulties which confront him in his business or profession than his classmate who received his liberal monthly allowance from home. It is still true at Yale, as it has always been, that a man does not suffer in the esteem of his classmates because he is poor. He is ranked according to what he is and does, and not according to what he has. Here, as elsewhere, each one must, for the most part, find his own employment; but a person of good ability, who knows how to economize and is willing to engage in any honorable work, need not hesitate to come to Yale because of lack of opportunities for self-support.

Death of Mrs. Woolsey.

Mrs. Sarah Sears Woolsey, widow of ex-President of Yale Theodore Dwight Woolsey, died at her home in New Haven, July 14. Three months before she was thrown from her carriage by a runaway horse and so severely injured that she never entirely recovered, failing in health steadily from that time. She is survived by three children, Dr. George Woolsey, Yale '81; Mrs. A. T. Bacon of Denver, and Miss Edith Woolsey of New Haven.

INDEX VOL. IX.

Classified Reference to Yale news of 1899-1900.

This index of Vol. IX. (1899-1900) of the YALE ALUMNI WEEKLY is placed under four general heads as follows: "Alumni News," "Athletic Sports," "General News" and "Illustrations." The figures which follow the indexed item indicate the number of the page; the letter "e" after the figures means "editorial," and the letter "c" communication." The pages run from 1 to 410.

ALUMNI NEWS includes Association Meetings, Class News and Obituaries, the latter indexed alphabetically and by classes.

ATHLETIC SPORTS include only Baseball, Football, Rowing and Track Athletics. The minor sports, such as Basketball, Bicycling, Golf, Hockey, Lacrosse, Shooting, Tennis, Yachting, etc., are placed under their respective heads in "General News."

GENERAL NEWS includes all the current happenings of the times not included in the two preceding general heads of "Alumni News" and "Athletic Sports." E. J. T.

Football Next

The Yale Eleven will be lined up in another month. Others will be playing before that. How hard and exciting and how impossible of prediction is the short, snappy season!

Some people used to fear this time as fraught with great danger to thousands of young men and boys. But the casualties are decreasing through intelligent handling and clever equipment. The armor of football makes a whole catalogue in itself—or rather it makes a big department in the Encyclopedic Athletic Sports Catalogue of
