Northfield and the Yale Delegation.

[A. C. Ludington in the Association Pamphlet.]

As the train nears South Vernon, one catches the first glimpse of the Northfield buildings across the Connecticut, half way up the long, smooth slope that stretches back to a range of wooded hills. Just a glimpse—then the train stops, you rush for a seat in one of the covered surreys that stand waiting, and are quickly started on the three mile drive to East Northfield. Traversing the wide, shady street, with the double row of trees arching across from either side,—the characteristic feature of New England towns,—past one old-fashioned, white colonial house after another, you finally come out on the open hillside, where the large stone and brick buildings of the school are scattered, widely separated from each other. East Hall, one of the School dormitories, is entirely occupied by the Yale delegation, who live there and make it their headquarters, and you are soon settled in your room.

After supper—the meals in the crowded dining room are, to say the least, informal—there is the evening meeting on Round Top, a little knoll crowned with a few pine-trees, and commanding a glorious view of the sunset off across the Connecticut valley. The people come trailing over the fields in small groups, and sit bareheaded on the ground under the trees while the leader stands in the center, as might Abelard have stood at his little abbey of Paraclete, surrounded by his pupils. Afterwards, at the platform meeting in the great auditorium, one of the principal speakers, some man whose words are strengthened by a wide reputation, gives such an address as you may seldom hear elsewhere, practical, suggestive, and above all, thoughtful. There follows a short delegation meeting of the Yale men in East Hall, at which every man is expected to be present, for of all the meetings, this means perhaps the most to each one, and embodies most fully the Northfield spirit. About half past ten everyone turns in for the night. In the morning, there are the special meetings for those interested in various departments of Y. M. C. A. work and the platform meeting in the auditorium, lasting till a little after twelve. The afternoons are entirely given up to outdoor sports, a series of baseball games between the various colleges, often ending in the finals with a game between Yale and Princeton, a track meet on the Fourth, a tennis tournament, and numerous scrub games of various descriptions. Besides, the baseball teams must of course practice, and the stunt events in the track games, such as the three-legged race, must be worked up.

The Fourth is a great day, beginning with a thorough canvass of the town in search of flags and bunting, a hard afternoon's work decorating the auditorium,—each college hanging its own flags and colors over the section where its seats are assigned,—and ending with a speech by some army or navy officer in the evening. At this meeting each college is called on for its song and cheer,—often one or two men from Klondike University or some such place get up and render an elaborate duet in the way of a yell,—which ceremonies being concluded, the assembly adjourns to a huge bonfire in the open, where a sort of Omega Lambda Chi celebration is performed.

NO CLASS DISTINCTIONS.

As for the times between the various meetings, when one is reading, writing letters, or loafing under the trees, the life at East is much like the life at New Haven, except that class distinctions are done away with almost entirely, and things are rather more free and easy—to the extent of an occasional rough-house. The piél tournament is a Yale importation deserving of the highest esteem; also the custom of singing on the steps in the evenings—a reminder of the fence. Indeed the Yale delegation, on account of its size, is more or less of a colony by itself, though there is a great deal of intercourse with the men from other colleges, and a reception is given at East for those men in the other delegations whom any of the Yale men know. It is natural, however, that friends should see the most of each other, whether on a Sunday afternoon walk to the boundary of three States, or at the daily swim in the Connecticut—where the rudiments of the noble art of riding a log may be learned,—or in going to the meetings together. It is the natural consequence that these friends often get to know each other better there in a week—and perhaps on a more serious basis—than in months at New Haven, and this, though by no means the primary aim, is one of the finest results of the conference.

Then, after ten days of listening to magnificent addresses, perhaps helping to win the baseball championship or the track meet, perhaps exploring the country a little, and resting and loafing in between times, the covered surreys again make their appearance, the long street is passed in the other direction, and, with a parting baseball game at the station while waiting for the train, the conference breaks up.

Columbia Degrees for Yale Men.

At the Commencement exercises of Columbia University thirteen Yale graduates received degrees.

As has been before noticed, President Arthur T. Hadley received the honorary degree of LL.D., which was conferred by Prof. John Howard Van Amringe.

Arthur W. Bingham, who received the degree of M.D. from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, won third prize ($200.00) for proficiency in examination and also stood fourth in rank in list of ten honor men of the Senior class in that department of the University.

The complete list of Yale men receiving degrees, besides President Hadley, is as follows:

Degree of LL.B. from the Columbia University Law School: Everett L. Barnard, A.B., '97; Thomas G. Shearman, Jr., A.M., '89.

Degree of M.D. from Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons: Milton H. Ballin, Ph.B., '96 S.; Arthur W. Bingham, A.B., '96; Daniel B. Brinsmade, A.B., '96; Lewis F. Frissell, A.B., A.M., '95; Lester F. Hoole, A.B., '96; Edward L. Trudeau, Jr., A.B., '96.

Degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon Norman E. Ditman, Ph.B., '96 S.; Charles R. Frazer, A.B., '99; Louis S. Levy, A.B., '98.

A Yale President at Illinois College.

Rev. Clifford W. Barnes, Yale '89, has recently received and accepted the offer of the Presidency of Illinois College. Mr. Barnes was in the Faculty of the University of Chicago, when the call came, teaching in the Department of Social Science. The offer came without warning and was coupled with the assurance on the part of the trustees of the College that a number of very important changes and improvements would be made if Mr. Barnes accepted the Presidency. Among these is the guarantee of the increase of the endowment fund to a very good figure. Satisfactory progress in this work has already been made.

Illinois College is the oldest educational institution in Illinois, founded by a company of Yale men nearly seventy-five years ago. Its condition for a number of years back has been very quiet, and the appointment of Mr. Barnes is perhaps the most important among many plans to revive its strength, and to move it along the best lines of modern education. Its environment, traditions and the number of its generous friends promise well for it in the future. Mr. Barnes will take up his work in the Fall.

Mr. Barnes took his B.D. from the Yale Theological Seminary in 1892 and his M.A. from the University of Chicago in 1893. He was Head Worker in the Men's Social Settlement in connection with Hull-House, Chicago, for a year and was engaged in institutional church work in Chicago from 1894 to 1897, first as pastor of the Sedgwick Street Congregational Church and then of Christ Chapel, Presbyterian. For a short time he assisted the Rev. Dr. John Hall of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, during an illness of the latter. He has pursued his special line of study at Oxford and Paris, and in the latter city he was pastor of the American Students' Service in the Latin Quarter.

Successful Year of Medical School.

The year in the Medical School which closed in June last is probably the most successful in the seventy years of its history. The unusual success which has attended the efforts of the present graduating class is probably due to the change from a three-year to a four-year course, as this is the first class to graduate after four years' study in the School.

In the competitive examinations for hospital appointments, a greater number of such appointments was secured than has fallen to the lot of any previous class. Out of a class of twenty-four twenty secured hospital appointments, of which the majority were appointments as first internes. Of these six are in New York City hospitals, which were open to competition.

Everything considered, the class has made a remarkable showing, especially for a school just gone under a new system. Further changes in the curriculum will be instituted when enough money can be secured.

The complete list of hospital appointments is as follows:

Edward F. Ashley, Ph.B., '97 S., W. W. Backus Hospital, Norwich, Conn.; George L. Buist, Jr., B.A., '96, Brooklyn City Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Frederick Coonley, B.A., '96, Presbyterian Hospital, New York City; Cyrus W. Field, Presbyterian Hospital, New York City; Nathan L. Griffin, New Haven Hospital, New Haven, Conn.; Carle W. Henze, New Haven Hospital, New Haven, Conn.; Thomas V. Hynes, New Haven Hospital, New Haven, Conn.; John W. Ives, Soldiers Home, Noroton, Conn.; William J. Maroney, St. Vincent's Hospital, New York City; Herman C. Pitts, Rhode Island General Hospital, Providence, R. I.; Charles O. Purinton, Connecticut State Prison Hospital, Wethersfield, Conn.; James F. Quinn, New York City Hospital, Blackwell's Island, N. Y.; Frank W. Stevens, Bridgeport General Hospital, Bridgeport, Conn.; Harold A. Tarbell, St. Barnabas Hospital, Newark, N. J.; Robert G. Tracy, Post Graduate Hospital, New York City; Wesley G. Vincent, B.A., '96, Post Graduate Hospital, New York City; Noah S. Wadhams, Ph.B., '97 S., New Haven Hospital, New Haven, Conn.; John G. Williams, St. Mary's Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y.; William H. Wright, Freedmen's Hospital, Washington, D. C.

Yale Graduates of New York Law School.

There were twenty-five graduates of Yale in the class which graduated from the New York Law School, June 14. Of these, one, Harry G. Brockius, Ph.B.; received an LL.M. He had previously taken an LL.B. from Ohio State University. The remaining twenty-four had conferred upon them the degree, LL.B., and are as follows: Thomas Allen, '98; Frank Clyde Baker, '90 T.S.; Thomas G. Barnes, '97; Luther G. Billings, Jr., '98 (cum laude); Colby M. Chester, Jr., '97 S.; Richard S. Chisolm, '97 (cum laude); Edward A. Colby, '80 S.; James T. Crane, '98; Henry H. Curran, '98 (cum laude); R. G. D. Douglass, '98; Philip Earl Dudley, '98; Charles Fred Gehrman, '98; William A. Hart, '97; James Hess, '98 S.; Frederic Kernochan, '98; Everett P. Ketchum, '8; Oscar Loewi, '98; Frederick A. Lehlback, '98 (cum laude); Orlando P. Metcalf, '98; W. Stevens Ray, '98; Robert D. Reynolds, '98 S.; Henry Sillocks, '98 (cum laude); John A. Walsh, '98, and Harold M. Wilson, '98.

Sigma Xi Elections.

A meeting of the Yale chapter of Sigma Xi was held Friday evening, June 8, and these officers elected for next year: President, Prof. Percy F. Smith, '88 S.; Vice-President, Dr. E. W. Scripture; Secretary, F. J. Carnell, 1900 S.; Treasurer, Dr. John C. Tracy, '90 S.; Nominating Committee, Asst. Prof. P. E. Browning, '89; Asst. Prof. H. A. Bumstead, Ph.D., '97; Asst. Prof. S. E. Barney, '79 S.; Dr. A. W. Evans, '90 S., and Harry W. Foote, '95 S.

The Society, of which the Yale chapter is a branch, is growing very rapidly in importance. In the West it is said to be outstripping Phi Beta Kappa. A charter was recently presented to a chapter at Brown University, where the majority of the members are scientific professors in the Faculty. At the presentation, President Faunce emphasized the importance of the event to the university. The officers of Sigma Xi Society are: President, H. S. Williams of Yale; Vice-President, S. W. Williston, Kansas; Corresponding Secretary, J. McMahon, Cornell; Recording Secretary, F. C. Caldwell, Ohio; Treasurer, E. W. Davis, Nebraska; Chairman of Council, E. L. Nichols, Cornell.

At the last meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in New York a large meeting was held of members of Sigma Xi who were attending the Association meeting.
